1- Article Acceptance Conditions

- Research articles that are the result of the authors' research in various fields of linguistics, ancient languages, language education and interdisciplinary subjects with linguistics are acceptable.
- Reviews of articles and books related to the mentioned fields are welcome.
- The submitted articles must not have been published in another publication or sent to other publications for publication at the same time.
- The language of the articles is Farsi and English.
- All articles are received and evaluated only through the journal system.
- The authors must make all the corrections requested by the reviewers during the reviewing process.
- On a separate page, the title of the article, the name of the author (authors), academic rank, the university of teaching or study, the postal address and the electronic address of the author's organization (authors') should be included. The corresponding author should also be specified.
- The editorial board is free to reject or accept and modify the articles.

2- Article Writing Guide

- Articles with 2500 to 5000 words will be given priority for publication after reviewing.
- The submitted article includes the following:
  1- Title (Persian and English).
  2- Abstract (Persian and English).
  3- 3 to 5 keywords.
  4- Introduction, explicit statement of questions and hypotheses and research method.
  5- The main body of the article.
  6- Conclusion.
  7- References.

- Sources include two lists:
  1- Persian and Arabic sources (in these sources, the full name and surname of the author should be mentioned (avoid writing the first letter of the author's name).
  2- Persian and Arabic sources in English with AD date and Latin sources.

Persian and Arabic sources (in English) should be arranged along with Latin sources in the form of a list in alphabetical order (to translate Persian and Arabic sources, the English form registered in the existing databases must be used and personal translation should be avoided. In other words, in the case of articles, by referring to the English abstract, the registered title of the article and the author' name should be extracted; in the case of books, use the English form of the book, and in the case of dissertations, use the English form included in the back of the thesis).
For example:
Eslami, M. (2005). Phonology: Analyzing the Intonation System of Persian. Tehran: SAMT. (in Persian).

- Different parts of the article should be numbered. Section 1 is dedicated to the introduction and subsections should not exceed 3 layers. Such as: 1-, 1-1-, 1-2-, 1-2-1- (from left to right).

- References should be made as follows:
For Persian articles references, please refer to the Persian guide section and use the format APA for English articles.
